Tipping.

By JOHN D. BARRY. HERE are signs of public rebellion against tipping. A newspaper in the East has been conducting a crusade. And here and there public organizations are making compacts not to give tips. I have been told that some of the women's clubs here in San Francisco are agitating the mat

Such efforts are, of course, not new. Often we hear of them or of something like them. They are usually sporadic and ineffective. Tipping goes on just the same, quietly, effectually, and those who refuse to tip continue to be at a disadvantage or to suffer humiliation or to feel that they are doing something that is resented.
